Each lands office day evidences the fact taken by bona-fide settlers of the liberality shown by the Crown Lands Act of 1885 to the aid of making their homes on the land colony. The record of residential homing this colony into existence since July, 1885, includes today's 24 applications, now stands at satisfactory total of 492, which is very modest estimate of an average of 20,000 people settled each applicant given the development of the natural resources of the colony. Two homestead selections were made at Armidale, embracing 574 acres; 145

THE RIFLE ASSOCIATION
THE GENERAL.

[illegible]

South Wales Irish Association sought to establish a system that is very much up to date and the associations ought to be working on it as they are the ones upon which we should expand our following questions will, I think, explain why the following answers were sought to produce them which can be accepted in full or in part as satisfactory.

1. For what object taxpayers are formed?
2. Ought such associations to receive State aid?
3. If State aid is granted should the State have a voice in the conduct and management of the business?

The answers I offer are as follows:-

1. Associations are formed to encourage citizens and to enable civilians to contribute their share towards the defence of the country.

[illegible]

It is not sufficient for trained personnel to be employed in a combat area unless in any military training, for the purpose of the training, the personnel must be able to perform the duties of the personnel in the training. The training must be of a nature that the personnel would be able to perform the duties of the personnel in the training. The training must be of a nature that the personnel would be able to perform the duties of the personnel in the training. The training must be of a nature that the personnel would be able to perform the duties of the personnel in the training.

To be useful rifle associations must work hand with the military authorities, the commanding the New South Wales forces far deeper and patriotic interest in the development and encouragement of rifle shooting than the Queen's prize. The position of the rifle associations is not a very high one in the eyes of the public, and it is not a very high one in the eyes of the military authorities. The rifle associations are not a very high one in the eyes of the public, and it is not a very high one in the eyes of the military authorities.

the two. The General regards prize in rifle-shooting as a duty: the winner of the prize regards it probably as a pastime. It is, however, very difficult at first sight to make a prize of rifle-shooting a duty, because the inferior shots to compete. To classify those of superior handicapping, would, I am afraid, be terrible, but I see no reason why men who are prizeable should not be called upon to pay a rate of entrance money than the man who has won a prize, and I should be inclined to say that a man who has never shot at the annual meeting should be such some other day. I would not beneficently without reducing the in the association.

(Government in granting aid to an association which is clearly the duty of a Government to do for the benefit of the people, and to prevent any person to supervise the expenditure and the work to be done.) The advice of the professional experts who is so much interested in the matter must be of great value, should, I think, be readily sought.

The chairman of the New South Wales Anti-Raiders' Association, Colonel Longfield, in addressing the members of the lack of support the Government has offered in the past to the joint officers of the various branches of the land forces of the colony. He remarked that there is a wide gulf between the Anti-Raid Association and the land forces. If it is not self-condemnatory. Why does it exist? He said that a remedy is needed. If the association has

The association has done good work in the past and the entering efforts of the chairman and secretary deserve full recognition. It is hoped that the association will be able to do more for any disaffected civilians must admit that if they take part in a business it should be conducted on service lines and solely for the purpose for which the nation was established. It is argued that the National Rifle Association in England is not the control of the military authority, and that Australia the service underwrites. A great deal impinging in England. The volunteer movement, organised principally by private enterprise in the past, has reached a point of organisation and efficiency which military experts recognise as approaching to the defence forces of Britain, and it is now the duty of the Government to raise the standard of efficiency of that force. Up to the present the growth of the movement has been natural. I almost say that it has been neglected, owing to the existence of the regular army and the militia. In Australia the position is totally different. We have no regular army, and a few Permanent Air Force and the nucleus of a Navy. The volunteer movement, and volunteers are called upon to take their place in the first line of land defence—a responsibility, which causes food for reflection.

as many members of rifle clubs will never take their place in the ranks in the hour of need it absolutely essential should be very much up to the mark. Many civilians who are good shots and prize-winners will volunteer their services; but young sportsmen between the ages of 18 and 30 will be seen in the first instance—and New South Wales produce at least 50,000. These concluding words are the strongest argument I can urge in my country's defence. Rifle associations must not be allowed a number of good shots, but must be able to attract and educate a coming crop. The result should be a higher standard of proficiency than at present.
